Nike Adapt BB

Brand Nike
Size 37-47
Price 1000€

When a player steps into the Nike Adapt BB, a custom motor and gear train senses the space around the foot and adjusts to keep the foot snug. Then, as players begin to move, FitAdapt technology kicks in. By manual touch or by using the Nike Adapt app on a smartphone, players can input fit settings that can vary during different moments of a game. Plus, players can opt in to firmware updates for the FitAdapt technology as they become available, sharpening the precision of the fit. For example, during a timeout, a player can loosen the sneaker and then tighten it up before restarting the game. As new digital services become available with fresh features, players can continue to adjust their preferences

Mag Back to the Future

Brand	Nike
Size	40-50
Price	20000€

Each shoe contains a motorized system where the laces and straps are tightened by winding them around spools. The automatic lacing system consists of two separate parts around the foot and ankle.

In the lower part, the self-lacing system has a strap moving mechanism located in a cavity within the sole of the shoe. It's powered by a small motor that rotates a driveshaft with two gears. The gears transfer power to two belts attached to the laces. The ankle cinching (belt) system in the shoe's upper part uses a different mechanism and would lie behind your achilles tendon. It uses a coil spring wrapped around a shaft that ultimately pulls on the ankle strap. The belt stays tight thanks to a locking mechanism, which is disengaged by the shoe's control system.

The two strap moving mechanisms are automatically triggered after your body mass is detected by a weight sensor in the heel. Both are connected to the shoe's central control system. For adjustments, there are manual controls: press a green button to tighten the straps, red to loosen them.

Although the 'power laces' in the lower part of the trainers might gain the most attention, it's actually the belt around the ankle that could prove really useful.
